Welcome to the July Network News. This month, we celebrate the 70th anniversary of the founding of the National Health Service. There will be events all over the country, and locally we are invited to a party at Ysbyty Gwynedd on July 7th, 11am - 2pm. (See Back Cover)

The founding visionary of the NHS was, of course, fiery Welshman Aneurin Bevan. It is unlikely he would ever be invited to today's BBC: “What is Toryism but organised spivvery? … No amount of cajolery can eradicate from my heart a deep burning hatred for the Tory Party... So far as I am concerned they are lower than vermin.” Nevertheless, his NHS saved and improved lives right, left and centre without discrimination. We are also pleased to discover that Bevan’s boss - Clement Atlee - often retreated to Nefyn for R & R.

Sometimes it seems the NHS is the only post-war achievement that has not been completely gutted. Most essential infrastructure - rail, power, water, communications et al. - was auctioned off in the 1980s. Too many people were seduced by the “cajolery” of the “spivs” into believing their bills would get smaller, their wallets fatter and that services would improve. That worked well, didn’t it?!

Till now the great heist has stopped just short of the health service. We don’t like the thought of giving birth, being in pain, being anaesthetized or spending our final days at the mercy of hedge funds and billionaires. But we must remain vigilant. The spivs will try all sorts of new tactics. At present they leech vast profits from the NHS through the pharmaceutical industry. No doubt Bevan would have simply called them out as “gangsta drug pushers”! The next visionary step for budding young Bevan’s is to socialise the production of medicine, and stop feeding Big Pharma. (see Page 4)

Blessings to all beings
My daughter lay prostrate and feverish on the floor of the hut, deep in Iban territory in Borneo and far from any modern medical facilities. Our interpreter informed us that one of the guides was a shaman. If we were agreeable, he would be honored to treat Leah. But first we should give him money. It was not payment for services—it was to make the medicine more powerful.

We might smile at such a primitive notion, but faith in the power of money pervades our modern medical system. All good capitalists believe devoutly in an Invisible Hand which wisely guides our choices in drug development. Nowhere is this faith more misplaced than for the development of medicines that treat and prevent infectious diseases.

Even today, as infectious diseases kill more than 9 million people worldwide each year, antibiotic development is moribund, abandoned by Big Pharma as a money-losing enterprise. New antivirals are being developed, but with ungodly price tags. Vaccine development has been revived, but only through an unstable combination of nonprofit efforts, government incentives and unprecedented prices. Pharmaceutical companies aren’t evil (usually). They just choose to make the most profitable drugs, not the drugs of greatest value to society. That’s why it’s time to begin socializing drug development—and we only need to look back at the trajectory of disease discovery and medicine development to see why.

Once the Malthusian Trap was sprung and the Industrial Revolution launched, control of contagion was required to sustain a culture of growth. The critical mass of modern cities was first purchased with the lives of dispossessed peasants: deaths from urban infectious diseases outpaced births, and cities’ populations were sustained only by continual immigration. Fortunately, we discovered germs and learned to tame them before we ran out of peasants. Clean water, vaccines and, eventually, antibiotics cut deaths from infection by a factor of 20 and enabled the demographic transition.

Free markets and profits were directly responsible for exactly none of these world-changing advances. Academics discovered the anti-sera that cut deaths from diphtheria and tetanus in half. Produced by urban health departments which maintained stables of retired police horses for this purpose, they were distributed to citizens without regard for ability to pay. Likewise, the city fathers of Frankfurt funded development of the first antibiotic, the anti-syphilitic Salvarsan in 1909. The rich of that era were no nobler than of ours, but knew from personal experience that infectious diseases were no respecters of class.

Vaccines, too, have a history of successful socialised development. In 1813, the U.S. Congress decided that all citizens were entitled to protection from Could You Patent The Sun? It’s Time to Begin Socialising Drug Development smallpox, and could have the vaccine mailed to them free of charge. Nearly all the vaccines that make cities safe and livable—cholera, typhoid, pertussis, diphtheria, polio—were developed by nonprofits and were commonly made available to all. Indeed, Jonas Salk scoffed at the notion that his polio vaccine should even be patented: [It belongs to] “the people…” he once said. “Could you patent the sun?”

Today, pharmaceutical companies have largely abandoned new antibiotic development on the eminently sensible principle that they are money-losers. Promising narrow-spectrum antibiotics—agents that precisely target pathogens and spare “good” bacteria—languish in development limbo because there is no hope that they might turn a profit. Old but effective antibiotics oscillate through wild price swings as manufacturers drop out and create monopoly pricing opportunities. Antibiotic development suffers from too much market freedom, not from too little.

Antibiotic and vaccine discovery and development are mature sciences; progress is more a matter of hard work than of breakthroughs—with few incentives. Innovation is still important, but not as important as the alignment of development efforts with societal needs. This means creating and providing vaccines to all, so that epidemics do not fulminate among the disadvantaged. It means creating narrow-spectrum antibiotics with small markets but large societal benefits. It means restricting the indiscriminate use of antibiotics so that they retain their potency. Markets fail to address all these needs.

In the US, the National Institutes for Health (NIH) already sets the agenda of new drug innovation by funding basic research—the phase that is highest-risk and most likely to fail. The subsequent phases of development—preclinical pharmacology and toxicology; chemistry, manufacturing, and control; and clinical testing — are well-defined disciplines. Drug companies perform no magic here but routinely contract out these functions to independent organizations. The NIH is as capable of writing these checks as any for-profit entity. But it, unlike pharma, has a mandate to write checks that improve public health, not private wealth. This approach won’t preclude for-profit drug development by private entities; it will just minimize the market-created gaps in our defenses against contagion.

The coming disruption in pharma will force drug makers to focus even more on short-term profits and their own survival. We cannot sacrifice our freedom from plague to the gods of the market. We need a reliable supply of the medicines that make modern society possible.

And my daughter? She was cured by neither the shaman’s ancient smoke nor by our modern ciprofloxacin. A trip down the river to a government clinic for a dose of milk of magnesia—a nearly 200-year-old concoction never patented outside the U.K. by its inventor—restored her health.

I was born on the side of a mountain in the Rhondda, in a terraced house that sat in its uniform row ribboning the hillside. My childhood years were spent on the vertical playground of these hills that I hardly recognised then as mountains. They were there as a presence, surrounding my world, accepting me in all seasons and weathers. They were where, as children, my mother and father had played before me, building dens from corrugated tin and bracken, lighting fires and running home with their clothes tangy from wood smoke. To me they represented wildness rather than wilderness - riding the dun horse bare back through steams black with coal dust, where falling off meant a blue scar for life - the tattoo of coal; swimming in ponds brimming with frogspawn, bringing tadpoles home in jam jars and taking them back again under the silver sliver of a new moon. They were my escape route, especially from censorious Sunday eyes that scoured the streets for renegades - those who dared to work, or worse (as in my case) play on the Lord’s Day. But to me the mountains were sanctuary and ceremony.

Leaving the Rhondda at eighteen it would be nearly another eighteen years before I was re-aquainted with mountains with an intimacy as intense as that of childhood. It often takes being in the wrong place long enough to illuminate the way to the right place. At the age of thirty-five I took up fell or mountain running. I spent long hours following the fluid shapes of my sheepdog companions, running in mountains, especially those of Wales. And for a while I raced in them too - Pen y Fan in a howling gale, holding on by my fingernails as the red clay, frozen hard as granite, covered with snow. There were no race results that year - they had scattered in the wind like the Sibyl’s leaves. The Peris Horseshoe in a thick, surreal mist, where human forms contorted with cramp took respite amongst rocks. I have been announced as lost during the Carnedduau Race, having foolishly followed a group of orienteers onto the wrong summit, and I have sat with others in the fields at Llanberis after the Snowdon Race, our skinned feet in bowls of water that slowly turned pink. Moelwyn, Cnict, Moel Siabod, Moel Hebog, Moel Cynghorion, Y Lliwedd, Y Llethr, Yr Wyddfa - these names are like a mantra.

For me the sanctuary of the mountain begins with the first foot set on it. Like a pact made with the self to be fully present, being in motion on the mountain is like a meditation - it allows what matters to come through. The mountains strengthen the muscle of aloneness. Each experience of the mountain is like a microcosm of the life journey. It takes me to edges in myself. It brings me Mountain Perspective. Boulders, bog and shale, firm or shifting ground, going up or coming down - balance can be lost at any time. Fighting to stand on Corn Ddu where fierce winds will have their way, on Pen yr Olwen where rain is relentless and mist takes visibility on a whim, I learn to accommodate change, to be flexible in path and pace, to be resilient. If the way is lost, I follow streams. downhill through crevices seeded with Rowan trees. As part of the interplay of shadow and light, I try to experience the brooding lake and the one filled with reflections of sun and sky, with equanimity. I find a sense of my own strength and fragility in the skull of a sheep or a shrew, the talon of a buzzard or a pocket full of quartz.

The symbolism of mountains is closely related to spiritual quests, to transcendence and transition. Over a period of four years I lost my mother and father and three other close relatives to death, both slow and sudden - terrifying in its randomness, and I was brought to a brink that I was as unaware of, as if I had been running a steep ridge in a whiteout. One of my father’s last gifts to me was a new compass, as if he sensed I would soon need to take new bearings. Death is awesome - it asks no questions of itself, only of life - how was it lived? How is it to be lived now? These bereavements were compounded by my own health issues, and I woke one day literally without balance, with my brain like a tuned out radio that insisted on transmitting and my muscles twitching and vibrating with the effort of every movement. For six weeks I could barely feed myself let alone run. The mountains receded from my limited world view. I was ill, dis-eased. I was out of focus with who I was in this new world.

Despite numerous exploratory tests, no-one could say what was wrong with me. The slow process of healing took nearly two years but when I was strong enough to stand and then walk and then to run - slowly and with wobbling limbs, I realised that I viewed life differently. Death, disease and uncertainty had cracked open the fissure where a small light had shone, and now it was glaring. I decided to give up my teaching job and move home to Wales. It was at this time, that I came to a cottage in the woods at Coed Hafod y Llyn. Cynefin is a Welsh word that is difficult to translate. It has multiple meanings - the place of our belonging, of our roots, our culture, our people, a place where people and nature are interconnected, the place where we are meant to be. And I had arrived.

In myth the forest represents elements we fear within ourselves, parts that are never entirely tamed, important parts - creative aspects of our inner world. We need to go into the dark forest. It might be a difficult and mysterious place - but fresh energies come from it. We claim aspects of ourselves that we have neglected to develop and become more than we thought possible. The forest was a final stage in my recovery and a new direction regarding my work and writing.

Life in the forest is heightened by having a minimum and living more fully - like a haiku. The cottage, once the old kennels, has a restored iron bedstead where an owl perched in the ruins. In dreams I hear the howling of dogs and the shrieking of owls - and feel at peace. I feel that I have found the fulcrum - acknowledging that up and down, lost and found are essentially places along the way. I feel connected to the raven’s raggedness, the branches’ bareness, the emptiness and fullness of the moon and to the blaze of meteors in a sky so dark. I find feathers loose among the leaf meal that lift with the wind, as if the will to fly could resurrect - and perhaps it can.

Not an hour, not a minute, not a second has been wasted on the mountains. I wear each ascent and descent like a row of obsidian arrowheads to mark my aliveness. One again they surround my world. But now it is also the forest that lives and breathes in me and I in it.

I bring groups into the forest - oncology patients - to walk and write in nature. We start at the shore of Llyn Hafod.

Taking time to reflect on where we are right here and right now, I read words of Native American wisdom that ask what we should do when we are lost in the forest. The answer is -

“Stand still,
The forest knows where you are. You must let it find you.”

I’m so glad I did.

Poor Taff - Golwg Llundain ar y Cymry / A London View of the Welsh People Until 4th November. This exhibition will show how the Welsh people were portrayed in the popular press in the 17th & 18th centuries. Some Welsh people adopted the images as acceptable representations of national identity. The exhibition explores how stereotypes of Welshness and Welsh identity evolved over time. Oriel Môn, Llangefni 01248 724444, orielynysmon.gov.uk

Wales For Peace & The Four Quartets Exhibitions Until 8th July. A celebration of what Wales has done for Peace over the last one hundred years; and an exhibition of work, created in Mind Art Classes, to tackle the stigma around mental health. Ucheldre Centre, Holyhead 01407 763361, ucheldre.org
James Green ~ Entering Donkey World Until 30th September. I can’t say exactly what drew me to specifically create that image, but it opened up a whole new avenue for expression. I felt compelled to celebrate donkeys (who I don’t consider are represented very well in the history of art, or sometimes appreciated generally) and create these compositions showing them having adventures in a mysterious world, free from any human control or servitude. Mostyn, Vaughan St., Llandudno LL30 1AB, 01492 879201, mostyn.org

Photographic Exhibition Until 27th July. Duncan de Silva shoots in black & white, using severe landscape and other wordly seascapes to accentuate the contrasting and comparative natures of body, mind and environment. Caban, Brynrefail, nr Llanberis LL55 3NR. 01286 685500, caban-cyf.org

Denbighshire Arts Society Summer Exhibition 30th June - 15th July. Paintings in all medias will be on show and visitors can vote for their choice which will win an award. 10 Penrhos Rd., Colwyn Bay, Conwy LL28 4DB. Contact 07808 473357.

Different Horizons 26th May - 5th June. An exhibition of paintings by North Wales 5, a group of talented artists creating work influenced by the land, sea or sky. Launch on 26th, 6 - 8.30pm. Chester Arts Centre, Northgate St., CH1 2HT, fvacn.org.uk

Mike Perry ~ Land/Sea Until 1st July. The work engages with significant and pressing environmental issues, in particular the tension between human activity and interventions in the natural environment, and the fragility of the planet’s ecosystems. Free entry. Mostyn, Vaughan St., Llandudno LL30 1AB, 01492 879201, mostyn.org

NW Potters Gallery ~ July Maker of the month is Terry Bell-Hughes. 1 High St., Conwy LL32 8DB. 01492 593590, pottersgallery.co.uk

Michael Sandle: Monumental Rage Until 7th October. In direct response to the horrors of our age, his work presents a passionate critique of the abuse of power in global conflict, politics and culture, and the accompanying cynicism and hypocrisy. Grosvenor Museum, Chester CH1 2DD. 01244 972197.

North & Mid Wales Lace Exhibition ~ A Celebration of Lace 30th June - 8th July. An exhibition of traditional bobbin lace, needle lace, crochet and knitted lace, tatting, group projects. The Soul Shall Walk Out
From conscious conversation to a wild night in the hills

Eric Maddern

We had a ‘conscious conversation’ evening at Cae Mabon recently. It was Charlie’s idea and she organised it. Twelve people came. Charlie served coffee cocktails and Ingwe cooked a delicious meze style vegan meal. The theme was ‘what is ecological living?’ At first we chatted as we ate, with Charlie occasionally urging us to stick to the subject! Then, after we’d eaten our fill, out came the GoPro (to make a film for the Natural Arts Association) and we each had a chance to talk to camera about our answers to the question. Inevitably in such an opening sortie we all talked on the subject we know most about – ourselves, and the degree to which we are living eco-lives. Everybody had his or her story. It was the second feast of the evening.

There were many tasty morsels: from Alice about Tyddyn Teg, the permaculture farm growing vegetables for five hundred local people; from Luke, the ‘fun guy’ who’s researching for ways to use fungi to make phosphorus (an increasingly rare resource) from the soil, available to plants; from Huw who can do a vegan diet but likes the occasional steak; from Jodie who would never do bed changing work in the city but who loves doing it here because, ‘look at the place’!

Peter talked about his passion to work prayerfully with his hands to create beauty. Samina spoke of how people have different ways of doing things and how we should welcome that diversity. There was a discussion of plastic and packaging. I talked about the emergent, evolving nature of Cae Mabon and contrasted it with ‘intentional communities’. Charlie said it was an ‘unintentional’ community!

It felt like we’d just scratched the surface when it was time to go. But at least we made a start. It was different from the usual chatter around a dinner table. We consciously made an effort to go deeper into a chosen topic. It reminded me of how, a few years ago, my friend Ali and I came up with an idea for ‘community conversation’.

We had a few gatherings around his dinner table and some enjoyable, if rather rambling, conversations. But they weren’t particularly focussed so in the end we decided to just talk to each other and began a ‘co-counselling’ relationship. We met every few weeks and one would talk for 35-40 minutes while the other mostly listened. We’d give a response then swap round. It was good to have a chance to intensely encapsulate your life like that. It helped to shape thoughts.

In time we dropped the form and just chatted, mainly about work, relationships and home but also about building, community, politics and dreams. We talked about books Ali had read and music we liked. I felt I was talking to a wise soul, and sometimes, maybe, becoming a little wiser myself. Perhaps you only fully know what you know when you speak it out.

Another example of this came with a visit from students who are about to leave school. They were from Brockwood Park in Hampshire, a school founded by Krishnamurti in 1969. They stayed at Cae Mabon on Tuesday and Thursday nights but on the Wednesday walked into the Carneddau and wild camped. After three weeks of unbroken sunshine it was the night the weather broke. With sixty mile an hour mountain winds blasting them they couldn’t get their tents up. They had to think with and on their feet. So ensued a wild and elemental adventure. The next evening by the Roundhouse fire I asked them to tell their story, each person offering a piece and letting it move around. It was in turn tender, moving, awe-inspiring and hilarious. Their unusual education had led these young people to be independent, responsible, creative, courageous and articulate. (I never once saw anyone look at a mobile phone). They acted with maturity and yet the exuberance of youth.

They spoke of running excitedly into the wind toward the summit; of rolling down steep grassy slopes, looking from afar like ‘quarter of a spider’; of, when the clouds cleared, seeing sunlit valleys appear in the distance. They were in two separate parties, the students, a.k.a. ‘the warriors’, and the teachers and mature students, who adapted their names to sound more tribal. They’d originally intended to camp separately, with the teacher group using a stone shelter. In the end they all stayed in or near this remote little hut.

The point is that in telling their tale not only did they relive their experience but the whole thing was lifted to a higher plane. What they’d shared became more collective, connected and meaningful. It assumed a mythic grandeur. It was soulful. As one of the teachers later said, it was the ‘spirit of storytelling’ that did it. ‘They will never forget that experience.’ There is something about this process of speaking our truth – in focussed conversation or in telling our stories – that is transformative. Is it, I wonder, because it is our soul talking? In my version of Merlin’s prophecy, delivered fifteen hundred years ago on the other side of the Great Mountain, he finishes by saying:

‘THE SOUL SHALL WALK OUT, the mind of fire shall burn and, in the twinkling of an eye, the dust of the ancients shall be restored’.

The playwright Christopher Fry in ‘The Sleep of Prisoners’ has a passage that includes these lines:

‘Thank God our time is now when wrong comes up to meet us everywhere, never to leave us until we take the GREATEST STRIDE OF SOUL we ever took. AFFAIRS ARE NOW SOUL SIZE. The enterprise is exploration into God.’

What does this mean, I wonder? What is the soul walking out, the soul striding? How big is the Soul? Is it time for ‘exploration into God’? * A rabbi from the Western Isles visiting Cae Mabon last month said she thought the world was ‘haunted by God’. She agreed with the much-publicised ‘death of God’ and said it is our job now to pick up the surviving fragments and make something new that works for us now. A kind of ‘exploration into God’.

I can’t help but think it’s something to do with soul talk: heartfelt conversation and speaking your story through a mythic lens. These actions are inevitably expansive. They may lead you to places in the Soul as yet unknown. But there’s also what you could call ‘soul walk’. This is when you ‘soul walk’ your ‘soul talk’. This can be done anywhere but improves in the presence of wild and ancient Nature.

Having told them Merlin’s prophecy, the last thing I said to the youngsters as they left for the mountains was: ‘Imagine you are your soul walking out!’ Their story brought some of that soul walking back.

Our ancestors are with us. The elements of their bodies may have gone back to their origin with the Great Mother, whether placed within her or scattered in wind or water, yet their spirit lives in and around us. The inheritance they left us within our bodies and energy fields is mighty. Whether positive or negative, it affects us deeply.

Primary cultures around the world have understood the importance, even the necessity, of honoring and communing with those who have gone before us.

One thing that stands out in ancient teachings, as well as modern epigenetic science, is this: not only genetic codes, but also our ancestors’ experienced environment, are passed down to us. A family who lived through a great famine, passes their intense issues with food down through the generations, seeded deep within each of us.

We need not know them, or even of them, for those past events to have a major impact on our lives. And we in the modern world have lost track of this, negating this vital communion as some superstitious form of ancestor worship.

Now, it is time to pick up that primary wisdom and recognize the profound power of the ancestors. For not only will that be the beginning of clearing deep layers of ancestral challenges, it will also awaken a profoundly beneficial and useful relationship.

For the ancestors’ deep commitment to their children down through all of time, is that each one might find the joy and power of giving their highest and finest gifts to the world. Those from our past are an enormous force in support of who we truly are, and the best of who we are becoming.

In this critical time on Earth, we need all these:

- the clearing of negativity that has cascaded down the family lines;
- the magnified power of being ourselves fully, and offering our rare and rich gifts to the world, and
- the sustainable power and richness of wisdom available in our ancient brain.

That ancient, survival part of our brain contains not only the information gathered with the intellect of the forebrain, but also the ancient intelligence of our bodies in connection with our Mother, the Earth. That will serve us most profoundly.

We must call upon this part of ourselves and of Life itself, and listen to the messages that remind us of what was learned by our forebears about harmonious and sustainable living.

We must breathe deep into our bellies, drop our awareness into our hearts, and sink our feet deep in the Earth, planting ourselves in order to grow and blossom again.

Oh, ancestors, may this be so.

The Great Invocation
From the point of Light within the Mind of God
Let light stream forth into the minds of men.
Let Light descend on Earth.

From the point of Love within the Heart of God
Let love stream forth into the hearts of men.
May Christ return to Earth.

From the centre where the Will of God is known
Let purpose guide the little wills of men –
The purpose which the Masters know and serve.

From the centre which we call the race of men
Let the Plan of Love and Light work out
And may it seal the door where evil dwells.

Let Light and Love and Power restore the Plan on Earth.

Brooke Medicine Eagle is a legendary Earthkeeper, wisdom teacher, healer, visionary, singer/songwriter, catalyst for wholeness, and ceremonial leader.
She is the best selling author of the Native American literary classic, Buffalo Woman Comes Singing, and of The Last Ghost Dance.
Over the last 35 years, her many music recordings, teachings, writings, conference appearances, and wilderness spiritual retreats have touched the hearts and minds of people all over the world. Her lineage is an amazing rainbow, and she has always identified with the richness of all humanity, rather than any one tribe or people.
She has ancestors in six native tribes (Crow, Nez Perce, Lakota, Cree, Piegan and Cherokee) as well as European blood from Scotland, Ireland, and Denmark. She is a non-traditional member of the Crow Indian tribe in Montana, where she grew up in a half-breed rancher family, homesteading in the beautiful high country of the reservation.
Brooke will be visiting North Wales this summer, offering workshops for women who are called to work with their ancestors, 25th-27th August in Newborough, Anglesey. No matter where you were born, whether to a family deeply connected to this land and their forebears, or into a more fragmented sense of your ancestral context, you will work with developing a deeper sense of connection to your ancestors’ gifts and wisdom, and with releasing and clearing trauma in your ancestral lines. We will honour those who have gone before, those who will come after, and the land, through dance, altars, ceremony and song.
There’s also the chance to connect with Brooke at an evening talk open to men and women on the 23rd of August.
