Welcome to the May Network News. There were many powerful words in our last issue, but the phrase that continues to resonate around the NN office is “Sacred Activism”. We feel it perfectly describes the role of humanity at this planetary moment. Sacred activism brings into alignment three strands of human activity: the political, the spiritual, and people-power: head, heart & hand.

With a few beautiful exceptions, politics is now a shambles beyond satire, and most churches are cold and empty. But there are eight billion human beings who now have more access to knowledge - and to each other - than ever before. True, many of these billions cling to the hope that a Trump, Bolsanaro, Bibi or Modi will lead them to a promised land. Others are awakening and rebelling to persuade their governments to accept the climate emergency. In their midst - and in every neighbourhood - is that radiant minority, the “shining ones”, who are not waiting for anyone else to act for them! As Marianne Williamson observed, “Our deepest fear is that we are powerful beyond measure. It is our light, not our darkness that most frightens us. And as we let our own light shine, we unconsciously give other people permission to do the same. As we are liberated from our own fear, our presence automatically liberates others.” A Return To Love

In her article on page 36, Thanissara recognises the Buddha as a pioneering sacred activist: challenging a racist caste system, calling out violence against animals, stopping war, laying down a non-hierarchical structure of community governance - even reforming a serial killer. The Buddha’s birthday, Wesak, is celebrated by many on the full moon in May, so let us all find a moment on the 18th to align ourselves in service to humanity: head, heart & hands.

Blessings to all beings
Chris and I had walked 750 miles along the Camino from Le Puy in the middle of France to Santiago de Compostella in the north west of Spain. But as I stood on the beach at Finisterre – the “end of the world” – I asked myself, what was all that about? What was the point? Why had I just spent nearly three months walking, day in, day out?

Gradually the answers came into focus. The immediate answer was in the form of a heart shaped stone on the beach. Love! That was something to think about. But other thoughts and reflections on route materialised too.

As we had neared the end of our pilgrimage, walking through the greener mountains of Galicia, we were reminded of home, of Wales. I thought of Enlli, Bardsey Island and recalled that it was said to be the island of 20,000 saints and a place of pilgrimage in medieval times. Why was it not so today? Maybe a route could be re-established. There was, in fact, a short section on Lleyn, mostly on roads but why not one from east to west, right across North Wales on footpaths? The Spanish Camino was easy to follow as it was well signposted so that was what was needed. The idea took shape in our minds. The seeds were planted for the North Wales Pilgrim’s Way.

That was 10 years ago this summer.

I had imagined spending all this time researching paths (I never could read a map) but that problem was solved by Ron whose experience with the Ramblers made him a huge asset. Chris had given a presentation in St Asaph Cathedral on our Camino experience and I had invited anyone present to a meeting at the Deanery to look at the possibility of setting up a Welsh Camino - and the North Wales Pilgrim’s Way committee was formed. Chris was the Dean of St Asaph at the time.

Since then the idea of pilgrimage has really taken off. The concept has been rediscovered as a time for reflection and reconnection to nature. To be alone with your thoughts, to tune in to the pace of the natural world, to see its patterns and rhythms can be a restorative medicine.

Our committee of volunteers first walked the North Wales Pilgrim’s Way in August 2011. Since then it has been fascinating to hear the accounts of so many others who have followed the Pilgrim’s Way. Their stories are now part of the pattern woven in with those who lived in times very different from our own. In those days there were saints and holy wells and dangerous crossings to Bardsey Island to reach the “place of resurrection”.

Why Walk?
Discovering the North Wales Pilgrim’s Way
Jenny Potter
But even today, this sense of resurrection on Bardsey can be experienced: in the words of one woman, “it was as if a heavy coat had slipped off my shoulders.” The peaceful end of a journey.

At the starting point of the route, at Basingwerk Abbey near Holywell, there is now a ceramic mural created by students under the direction of sculptor Neil Dalrymple, illustrating landmarks along the Way. The students visited sections of the route before setting to work, adding their own touches to Neil’s design: scary faces among tree roots, “me and David Beckham” and “my mate Dai.” A teacher had accompanied them to Holywell, where they noticed that she dropped a daisy onto the bubbling waters. It was as a prayer for a little daughter she had lost. The students were touched by this and preserved that moment: you can see the daisy in the corner of the well in their mural.

Our website (see below) now has a number of blogs under the tab “Inspiration.” Many people have stories to tell. The stories of saints take the form of ancient churches and holy wells, while the stories of the stone circles in the Carneddau mountains can only be guessed at.

The landscape along this route has inspired poets as well as pilgrims through the ages. The ecstatic poem the Windhover by Gerard Manley Hopkins which I learned at school, was written when he was at St Beuno’s college not far from St Asaph and at the other end of the route, RS Thomas is now celebrated with an annual literary festival in Aberdaron. In the central section, the Aled valley which runs through Llansannan is renowned for producing a number of Welsh poets. Their names are inscribed on the writers’ memorial in Llansannan and marked with a wood sculpture on the Pilgrim’s Way at Cleiriach.

William Salesbury (1520-1584) was one of the translators of the bible into Welsh while Gwilym Hiraethog was a poet and political writer. Henry Rees, a Calvinistic Methodist minister wrote sermons which he delivered internationally; Tudur Aled in the 16th century created the rules for Welsh poetry which would have instructed Iorweth Glan Aled in the 19th century. Llansannan has a history of poetic, religious and political thinking.

And this, I think, is an answer to my question: why take time out, walk, reflect and open oneself to the world around? The creativity of the Llansannan writers is a product of such an environment, where they lived so much closer to nature than we do today. While these may have been exceptional people, we too may have the experience of having our habitual ways of thinking challenged and refreshed by time on the Welsh camino, the North Wales Pilgrim’s Way. We’d love to hear your stories. Do contact us through our website. Bon camino!

I don’t expect much joy in writing about climate breakdown. On one side, there is grief and fear; on the other side, machines. I became an environmentalist because I love the living world, but I spend much of my life thinking about electricity, industrial processes and civil engineering. Technological change is essential, but to a natural historian it often feels cold and distancing. Today, however, I can write about something that thrills me.

Most climate scientists agree it is now too late to prevent 1.5°C or more of global heating only by cutting our production of greenhouse gases. Even if we reduced our emissions to zero tomorrow, we would probably overshoot this crucial limit. To prevent a full-spectrum catastrophe, we need not only decarbonise our economy in the shortest possible time, but also draw down carbon dioxide that has already been released.

But how? The best-known proposal is called bio-energy with carbon capture and storage (BECCS). This means growing wood or straw in plantations, burning it in power stations to produce electricity, capturing the carbon dioxide from the exhaust gases, and burying it in geological formations. If deployed at scale, it is likely to trigger either an ecological or a humanitarian disaster.

One BECCS proposal, favoured by certain governments, would cover an area three times the size of India with plantations. This involves either converting agricultural land, in which case BECCS would cause mass starvation, or converting wild land, in which case almost-lifeless plantations would replace 50% of the world’s remaining natural forests. Even so, it might not be effective, as any carbon savings will be counteracted by the use of nitrogen fertiliser and the release of greenhouse gases from the soil as it’s churned up for planting. BECCS can lead only to catastrophe, and should be abandoned.

Another option is direct air capture: extracting carbon dioxide with machines. Aside from the expense, which is likely to be massive, the amount of steel and concrete required to build them could help to push the world beyond certain climate tipping points before the positive effects are felt.

None of this is necessary, because there’s a much better and cheaper way of doing it. Natural climate solutions draw carbon from the air through the restoration of living systems. They could help to solve two existential problems at once: climate breakdown and ecological breakdown. Their likely contribution is enormous – bigger than almost anyone guessed a few years ago – and it is still scarcely explored.

The greatest potential identified so far – as so much land can be used this way – is in protecting and restoring natural forests and allowing native trees to repopulate deforested land. The greatest drawdown potential per hectare (though the total area is smaller) is the restoration of coastal habitats such as mangroves, saltmarsh and seagrass beds. They stash carbon 40 times faster than tropical forests can. Peaty soils are also vital carbon stores. They’re currently being oxidised by deforestation, drainage, drying, burning, farming and mining for gardening and fuel. Restoring peat, by blocking drainage channels and allowing natural vegetation to recover, can suck back much of what has been lost. These are the best-studied natural climate solutions. Others have scarcely been explored. For example, we currently have little idea of what the impact of industrial fishing might be on the seabed’s vast carbon store. By disturbing the sediments and lifting the carbon they contain into the water column, trawlers and dredgers are likely to expose it to oxygen, turning it into carbon dioxide. One study suggests that repeated trawling in the north-western Mediterranean has caused a reduction in carbon storage in the top 10 centimetres of sediments of up to 52%. Given the vast area trawled every year (most of the seabed on the world’s continental shelves), the climate impact could be enormous. Closing large parts of the seas to trawling could turn out to be a crucial climate strategy.

Scientists have only recently begun to explore how the recovery of certain animal populations could radically change the carbon balance. For example, forest elephants and rhinos in Africa and Asia and tapirs in Brazil are natural foresters, maintaining and extending their habitats as they swallow the seeds of trees and spread them, sometimes across many miles, in their dung. White rhinos can play a major role in preventing runaway wildfires in African savannahs. If wolves were allowed to reach their natural populations in North America, one paper suggests, their suppression of herbivore populations would store as much carbon every year as between 30 and 70 million cars produce. Healthy populations of predatory crabs and fish protect the carbon in salt marshes, as they prevent herbivorous crabs and snails wiping out the plants that hold the marshes together.

What I love about natural climate solutions is that we should be doing all these things anyway. Instead of making painful choices and deploying miserable means to a desirable end, we can defend ourselves from disaster by enhancing our world of wonders. However, nothing should be done without the involvement and consent of indigenous people and other local communities. Nor should damaging projects, such as monocultural plantations, be passed off as natural climate solutions. As a paper recently published in Nature shows, several governments are attempting this deception.

Today, a small group of us launch a campaign for natural climate solutions to receive the commitment and funding they deserve. At the moment, though their potential is huge, they have been marginalised in favour of projects that might be worse than useless, but that are profitable for corporations. Governments discuss the climate crisis and the ecological crisis in separate meetings, when both disasters could be addressed together. We have created a dedicated website, an animation, and a letter signed by prominent activists, scientists and artists: www.naturalclimate.solutions

We don’t want natural climate solutions to be used as a substitute for the rapid and comprehensive decarbonisation of our economies. The science tells us that both are needed: the age of carbon offsets is over. But what this thrilling field of study shows is that protecting and rewilding the world’s living systems is not just an aesthetically pleasing thing to do. It is an essential survival strategy.

Trigonos is a not-for-profit social business located in the Nantlle Valley adjoining Llyn Nantlle.
CONSCIOUS CAMP in GLYNDYFDRWY A healing festival seeking to improve peoples quality of life by providing workshops aimed at removing negative blockages, dissolving self limiting beliefs, creating empowerment and fun. See Calendar for information.

ECOBRICKS Grab a plastic bottle and start filling with all the plastic that comes into your home that you can't recycle. These eco bricks will then be used within the community of Llanfairfechan to build something new - mostly used with the playground.... it's highly addictive once you begin collecting with far less plastic waste going into landfill. Top tip, they need to be well packed for stability so using a wooden spoon to poke the plastic down is quite helpful. Facebook: Ecobricks

This artwork was created by Artist and Art Psychotherapist Manuela Niemetscheck while working as Arts in Health Practitioner within Betsi Cadwaladr University Health Board’s (BCUHB) Community Environmental Arts Therapy Group from 2017 to 2018. The artwork explores the process of being on a journey and offering a sense of place outdoors. Here the main objectives are about being and experiencing, the development of restorative spaces and senses, as well as securing a safe environment. Sessions were based around the Celtic calendar and circle of trees, following the yearly seasonal cycle and fostering a deep connection to nature with an approach for awakening the heart and the senses. The aims were to reflect on experience, gain awareness and understanding of self and find a balance between doing and feeling within this pervasive western culture.” Neuadd Ogwen, Fford Bangor, Bethesda LL57 3AN, neuaddogwen.com

“You never change things by fighting against the existing reality. To change something, build a new model that makes the old model obsolete.”

This favourite quote of mine is Buckminster Fuller’s. I’ve been looking for a way to implement this philosophy into my work.

I spent some time with overseas intelligence officers last year, teaching leadership. I used the opportunity to subversively challenge their worldview under the guise of improving decision-making skills. By challenging them to argue for their enemies’ viewpoint, it soon became apparent that both sides had ideas worthy of consideration. People are complex beings. Ultimately though, the officers realised that after leaving the course, they would hit the paradigm inertia present within organisations and governments and have to continue working on their old assumptions.

So, upon my return I wrote a book called From Mercenaries to Missionaries. It’s a fusion of experience, observations and research intended to help business owners evolve into leaders who can unleash more of the purpose, passion and potential of teams in growing businesses. Within society entrepreneurial people are creating wealth by selling products and services. To be successful they have to compete for their place in the Universe and bringing a product to the marketplace often requires a Herculean effort.

I realised by working with business owners, that once they achieve a certain measure of success, they can be persuaded to challenge the present paradigm, much like I did with the intelligence officers.

Businesses usually follow the ‘growth for growth sake’ mentality. This leads to growing teams of people who become less engaged, trading their time for money, constantly in need of a pay rise to maintain the levels of dopamine they get from opening their payslips. It’s the mercenary approach. It becomes souless and frustrating working in mercenary organisations as people become widgetized to remove uncertainty. But I help leaders harness the complexity and creativity within the team, not hide from it.

To challenge this paradigm in larger organisations is possible but it meets more inertia. So, this book helps founders and entrepreneurs develop high performing, intra-dependent teams who can make ecological decisions which don’t sink the ship. This then allows the entrepreneur the freedom to solve other more meaningful problems and they can be guided to help their communities thrive too. I would say: ‘Inspirational leadership is ordinary people doing extraordinary things in a constantly shifting world. Leading themselves and, by example, others into a better world for everyone. A world which is environmentally sustainable, socially just, and a personally fulfilling place to live and work’.

Until we change the way we operate in society, I’m on a mission to challenge the entrepreneurial lifecycle helping them become purpose focussed instead of purely profit driven. By unlocking more of the potential of the team’s collective intelligence, organisations can become platforms for developing a new world which makes the old world obsolete.

Since I began my zero-waste journey at the start of September last year, I have often reflected on how absurdly tiny the net effect on the environment must be. One might make a fitting analogy of a child attempting to bail out the sinking Titanic using only a bucket and spade, or attempting to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by holding your breath. Statistically, it amounts to zero. My most frenzied, dedicated and zealous environmental conscientiousness within my own walls will never benefit the planet on any relevant scale. So why is it that five months on, I’m still not buying cartons of my favourite barista oat milk?

It would just so happen that these last few months have seen an extraordinary reaction from the general public against plastic manufacturing. David Attenborough’s Blue Planet may have had something to do with it. Perhaps the great naturalist prised the lid off a simmering cauldron of discomfort over plastic use, fuelled by years and years of grotesque statistics. There will be more plastic bags in the ocean than fish by the year 2050! What a revolting thought.

One key reason as to why plastic use generates so much media attention is the fact that footage of pollution hotspots contains so many products which we see in our daily lives. Our consciences are quite understandably outraged when we see pictures of water bottle caps inside the stomachs of birds, or baby turtles strangled by plastic beer can hoops. We recognise where these objects come from, and it makes us squirm with guilt. For this reason, the visual impact of plastic pollution can be very powerful and emotive. A woman recently appeared on social media who made it her business to paddleboard through watercourses which had become swamps of plastic waste. A number of surfers have deliberately chosen to film themselves riding plastic-infested waves, the resulting footage being shocking to say the least.

There is now a growing impression in the public consciousness that plastic waste is rather disgusting and that it is undesirable that plastic refuse should be allowed to continue ruining the planet. If anything demonstrates this, it must surely be how well the public has accepted the introduction of 5p charges for plastic shopping bags. There were of course people who voiced their annoyance at this tiny intrusion of charity and conscientiousness into their otherwise selfish lives, but they tended to find themselves laughed at more often than they found themselves agreed with.

As a consequence, when plastic manufacturing is discussed in the media, it tends to be treated as problematic and unsustainable. The very fact that this is happening marks a shift towards more sustainable manufacturing, because in all eventualities, the manufacturers will cater to demand. The demand will only shift when the public perception changes.

There can be no change in public perception without raising awareness of the issues, drawing attention to the facts and using the platforms available to you to make the case for change.

Plastic pollution is part of a very big picture. It has been quite rightly claimed by a number of environmentalists that “we can’t recycle our way out of this crisis”.

This sentiment embodies one of the most valuable lessons the human race still has to learn. We need to move our focus away from clearing up the mess we make through our activities and direct our efforts towards preventing our activities causing the mess in the first place. We have to stop automatically suggesting methods of problem solving that do not target the root cause of our impending ecological crisis, which is human greed and selfishness. This manifests in single use products and the thirst for acquiring material goods. It is important that we feel ashamed of the pollution we are responsible for, but it is more important that we begin our journey to recovery by challenging our selfish impulses. This applies not just to our individual choices, but to governments, manufacturers and corporations. Selfishness is defended and excused under many pretexts as the impulse assumes many disguises. It pervades our society and it is the root cause not just of plastic pollution, but of what is now referred to as throwaway culture. Let us start by peeling away the disguise from our motives and exposing selfishness for what it is, and as uncomfortable as this may be, more happiness, beauty and peace will come from it.

Luke works with the trees at Cae Mabon. Since finishing his forestry degree at Bangor University, Luke has been working on his PhD in environmental microbiology, focussing on how fungi can be used to help deliver minerals to plants in poor soils. He is particularly interested in fungi, and is prone to spending lots of time closely examining tiny mushrooms growing out of tree stumps and cracks in the rocks.

Anglesey has become the first county in the UK to be awarded ‘plastic-free’ status by a marine conservation group.

Surfers Against Sewage said it recognised work to reduce the impact of single-use plastic on the environment.

It has seen businesses encouraged to ditch disposable coffee cups and bottles, and schools pledging to cut plastic waste.

The award follows an 18-month campaign led by local activist Sian Sykes to highlight the issue of disposable plastic waste.

Sykes said: “I am incredibly proud of the Anglesey community who have supported the single use plastic free movement, we are making a difference and I am excited to see what else we can do on the island.”

To achieve the Surfers Against Sewage recognition, the island had to implement a plan to cut plastic use, including establishing a community-led group to spread the message.

The marriage of spiritual practice and activism has always been a dimension of religious life, as modeled by most of the great founders of traditional religions. Some religions have exemplified this more than others. On the whole, while the Buddha himself was clearly engaged in social reform, Buddhism itself does not have a strong activism ethos or history. It tends to excel in its extraordinary insights into the human mind, with its map of consciousness laying out the path of enlightenment.

However, Buddhism has always adapted to the context it is in, and while it tends to be conservative, it tends not to be fundamentalist. It can respond and adjust.

Based on the example of the Buddha, who was a radical pragmatist, alongside the ethical imperative of Buddhist practice, there is no reason Buddhism can’t actively respond to our times while creating alliances with other faiths in order to work together toward a sustainable world.

Buddhism, with its deep, incisive understanding of the nature of consciousness, has a key contribution to make. There has never been a greater need to shift from a dualistic consciousness, which habitually focalizes around “me” and “mine” to recognizing our profound interconnectedness with the Earth and all beings.

When the dualistic mind only relates to the Earth and her creatures as objects to use or exploit, it continues to generate environmental collapse at an alarming speed.

On the other hand, the journey of awakening invites a shift from the mind, which objectifies, into our deeper heart, which knows the intimacy of all things. A present, aware, and listening heart, attuned to intuitive intelligence, manifests as wisdom and compassion. This profound listening is cultivated through meditation. As we reconnect, again and again, to our innate awakening process, it dynamically reveals appropriate response. Rooted in the unmoving ground of being, unshakable and authentic in our truth.

On the whole, modern Dharma practitioners haven’t really felt the need to become radical activists focused on changing the system. If we moved into Engaged Buddhist practice, it was in areas like hospice, or helping people reduce stress, or responding to the suffering that is often a byproduct of systemic inequality—ministering to prisoners, for example. We have yet to come to terms with centuries of injustices that perpetuate systemic suffering and that, therefore, needs to be addressed systemically and collectively, beyond just our personal practice.

Generally speaking, in the white middle class where Buddhism has found a strong following, various forms of pressing injustices haven’t directly challenged practitioners. For the most part, people of color have a different experience.
At the same time that the first Beats and Hippies were discovering Asian-based spiritual practices, people of color in the U.S. were consumed by civil rights, surviving a deeply racist system or negotiating the difficulties of being second-generation immigrants. Those who traveled to Asia to study with meditation masters were mostly the children of white middle-class families who had the luxury of focusing on internal shifts of consciousness. We assumed this would be enough to positively influence the world. Few of us looked beyond that.

All of a sudden, we are being challenged; what can we offer from all this practice in response to a world in crisis? And what value is all this meditation and mindfulness if we just sit by and let the world burn?

The old premise “getting involved in politics is inappropriate” isn’t going to hold ground when the ground beneath us is disappearing—washed away by floods, decimated by typhoons, and dried up by drought. If we just sit this out, our “equanimity” will become indifference, our focus on personal awakening will be revealed as self-absorption, and our seeking of peaceful, mindful moments will become willful avoidance and denial.

We are being challenged to look at ourselves, our intentions, what our lives have been built on—personally, nationally and globally—and to revisit Buddhism itself; how we’ve interpreted and embodied it.

Is our dharma practice helping us to be truly and authentically responsive to the times we are in, or are we simply traditionalists, good meditators, nice people who are not free or empowered enough to really meet a new global paradigm?

We are racing to secure a sustainable planet in the face of a psychopathic petroleum and fossil fuel empire that simply doesn’t care if it kills us all.

Just as Siddhartha was shocked out of his apathy by the sight of the heavenly messengers of sickness, old age, and death, we too are being shocked awake. The question is, are we equipped to meet the challenge, or have we rendered the radical dimensions of the Buddha’s extraordinary example to a preferred introversion, even in the face of catastrophe?

We can’t avoid what is happening, and as all of us are impacted, inaction is not a viable option. We have an ethical and compassionate imperative to respond, and Dharma practitioners have something to offer.

Thanissara is an Anglo-Irish teacher from London, and started Buddhist practice in the Burmese school of U Ba Khin in 1975. She has supported a number of Climate Activist events, retreats, and programs, and is deeply engaged in applying the Dharma to our times of planetary emergency. Her most recent book is Time To Stand Up.

The Great Invocation

From the point of Light within the Mind of God

Let light stream forth into the minds of men.

Let Light descend on Earth.

From the point of Love within the Heart of God

Let love stream forth into the hearts of men.

May Christ return to Earth.

From the centre where the Will of God is known

Let purpose guide the little wills of men – The purpose which the Masters know and serve.

From the centre which we call the race of men

Let the Plan of Love and Light work out And may it seal the door where evil dwells.

Let Light and Love and Power restore the Plan on Earth.

A brief history of time at Nant Gwrtheyrn

A reformed quarried cleft in the coastline of the Lŷn harbours buildings of heritage now used to impart language of ancient Celts. The steep trek down the access road, with its hairpin bends, granted the breathing in of the cleft’s hewn landscape and glade.

Now still privileged, he sits, sipping a coffee. Beneath a cloudless, faded, azure sky there’s a vista of becalmed sea bounding an ageless coast stretching down the peninsula. The sun balms the windless café terrace. It is unbelievably snug. One could doze here, and if awoken might have dreamt it was April or August.

But, it is mid-November. Of the several persons on the terrace, this realisation disconcerts only one. He knows this is the hint of the global tragedy that will burn into the generations to come whilst to others around “isn’t it a lovely day?”. They prattle on in English. As they do.

How do you - tell people a lovely day can be a dire warning? Enjoy it while you can, he thinks, but wishes the begetters only understood that they might work instead, as penance, for a lesser tragedy.

With one last sip of the coffee and a longer sip of the glorious view, he rises.
Now it will be a steep trek uphill.
